

Mango ups the ante with Manchester move - 11 November 2008

Design and online agency Mango is making clear its ambitions with a move from its original home of Worsley into new offices in Manchester's Northern Quarter...

The business, formed in 2001 by Marcus Castle and Mark Thompson, has made the switch after what it calls "a very successful year trading."

This has seen the team bringing on new accounts such as Kruger Tissue, Care Shop and The Rating and Valuation Agency.

Mango's new base is at the Royal Mills complex, a space that Castle described as "much more inspiring and conducive to a creative atmosphere."

The agency's business development director Steve Hallam added: "It's good to be working in the city centre and while we realise image isn't everything, it is important especially where new business is concerned.

"Our new offices are a lot more reflective of the quality of work we are producing and the high profile clients we are servicing"
